Neil LaBute's The Shape of Things pits Adam against Evelyn in the ultimate battle of the sexes, where strategies for sexual humiliations are planned. LaBute probes the dark side of individualism whose ultimate evil is an inability to imagine the suffering of others. Join LaBute in exploring the subjectivity of love and the definition of art itself through the lens of Adam and Evelyn's relationship. Watch as their love flourishes and as betrayal takes its toll on their relationship. The play's climactic revelations will shock all audiences! Does the end justify the means?

Everything Is Subjective.
